COAST CLIPPINGS.

Earl Souler, Sierra City, aged eleven, blew off two of his fingers with a giant powder cartridge last week.

The Bald Mountain Extension Company of Forest City cleaned up eighty-seven ounces of gold as the result of a week's washing.

The stage from Alturas, in attempting to cross Oak Run near Millville Friday night, was carried down stream. Two of the horses were drowned and the express and mails lost. The driver had a narrow escape.

In the train wreckers' trial at Auburn Friday morning the prosecution closed their case, and up to the time of adjournment the defendant, Steingel, and two other witnesses for the defense had been examined.

An action was begun in Sacramento some time ago by Attorney-General Hart against the State Prison Directors to recover money overdrawn by them from the State for travelling expenses. The case has been set for March 6th.

At Etna, Thursday night, a man named Nally while under the influence of liquor, was creating trouble in a saloon. He was put out, and it was supposed that he had gone to his cabin. Friday morning he was found in his cabin dead. His head was badly cut with an ax.

HORRIBLE STORY.

Bodie Doctors Disagree Their Profession.

After a lapse of three days, says the Bodie Free Press, the mystery surrounding the human remains found in an abandoned shaft by a reporter is partially explained, thanks to the faithful work of an intelligent coroner's jury. A great mass of testimony has been given, and the outcome so far is satisfactory in a measure. On December 8th Mary E. Turner, a married woman aged 19, died, and was buried in the Bodie cemetery on the 9th. The finding of human remains, and a general discussion of the same, led Mr. Turner to suspicion that they might be those of his wife. Wednesday morning he and a few friends went to the cemetery and opened his wife's grave. Before reaching the proper depth things did not look right, and when the coffin was reached it was found to be empty. The husband's feelings can be better imagined than described.

The Coroner's Jury, after long and tedious examination of obstinate and unwilling witnesses, traced the remains found to Dr. Blackwood, who either dug them up himself or hired the disagreeable work done. He rented a vacant house on Fuller street for the purpose (it is believed) and dissected the body of the late Mrs. Turner. The skull found its way to Dr. Jones' office, and a competent lady witness testified that she recognized the same as the skull of Mrs. Turner by the teeth, which were remarkably even and handsome. One witness testified that he frequently accompanied Dr. Blackwood to the dissecting room, and saw him use a knife on the remains, cutting away flesh and performing other work in that direction. The man who so testified was one of the unwilling witnesses, but the circumstances were such that he was forced to disgorge a portion of his knowledge regarding the affair. Dr. Blackwood testified that he knew nothing about the remains, and then jumped the town and has not yet been overtaken.

MOLINA, Ill., July 14, 1881.
H. H. Warner & Co., Rochester, N. Y.
GENTLEMEN: Your remedy, the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure has been used by both my wife and myself. She used it on general principles, as a system and liver regulator; I took the medicine for a long-standing liver trouble, which has been the source of much inconvenience, and which failed to yield to the doctor's remedies, or any other, until I used your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. We both unite in pronouncing it to be the best medicine ever used, and in recommending it to others as a safe remedy.

MY DEAR SIR: For several years I have been a sufferer, and until your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure was suggested I have not known what it is to be free from pain. My family physician attributed all my suffering to a diseased condition of my kidneys, and after he had failed to give me relief, I tried your remedy. It is a well man to-day.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Carson Appeal contains a card signed "Taxpayer," and an editorial note suggesting that the Commission for the care of the insane employ an expert to accompany them on their visit here Wednesday, when it is expected they will accept the asylum building. If the Appeal editor had taken the trouble to have investigated the matter he would have found that the State has been paying an expert $6 per day ever since the building started for looking after the contractors and seeing that the work was done in accordance with the contract.

In Oakland there is an ordinance requiring peddlers of books to have a license, but excepting from its operation religious works. E. Meyer was arrested under the ordinance for selling Thomas Paine's Age of Reason. His defense was that the book was a religious work. He was acquitted by the jury. This is the first time that an American jury has passed upon the question.

The Index asks us what the duty of the Republican party in this State is. Its most pressing duty is to sit on a few of the little would-be bosses here the same as it did on the big ones in New York and Chicago. The party is tired of the crank boss business.

We greatly regret that lack of space prevented us giving the full text of Blaine's speech on Garfield. Some of his references to his early life and military career we were forced to omit.

THE GAZETTE'S ghosts in car No. 3 turn up in the Bulletin credited to the New York Tribune.

The wires went down east of Ogden this afternoon, and stopped the Eastern news.

The Index has found a mate. They make a pretty pair.

The Nomination of Conkling and Sargent in Executive Session.

WASH NOTON, February 25.

When the nomination of ex-Senator Conkling as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court was read in executive session of the Senate yesterday afternoon, a motion was made to take it up for immediate consideration. Senator Hoar then took the floor and warmly said that while he conceded Conkling's great ability, and that no man since Webster had surpassed him in intellectual force, he believed that Conkling had used his powers for bad purposes, and he did not believe him honest. "His elevation to the Supreme bench," said Hoar, with great excitement of manner, and pounding his desk with emphasis, "would be a disgrace to the judicial ermine," and he, therefore, interposed an objection to the present consideration of the nomination, and insisted that it should take the regular course of reference to the Judiciary Committee. A single objection being sufficient to prevent immediate consideration, the nomination was accordingly referred to the committee, under the rules, without an opportunity for debate or any reply to Hoar's remarks.

The nomination of Senator Sargent, as Minister of Germany, was then referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, under objection to its immediate consideration, which was interposed by Cameron, of Pennsylvania, understood to be friendly both to him and Conkling, but who desired to prevent the appearance of any distinction between the cases of the two ex-Senators. Prominent members of both political parties in the Senate predict that the nominations will be confirmed by an overwhelming majority.

Telegraphic reviews.
—Conkling's friends are indignant at the delay in his confirmation.

—They say Gladstone will resign if the action of the land law is investigated.

—The town hall at East St. Louis burned Saturday, and with it a $12,000 library.

—Danehower is not able to start for St. Petersburg. The party left without him.

—The Baptist Church at San Jose was destroyed by an incendiary fire Saturday night.

—A hundred and fifty persons are reported killed by an explosion in a colliery in Austria.

TO-DAY'S NEWS

Press Dispatches to EVENING GAZETTE.

Honors to Garfield.

WASHINGTON, February 27.

The following is Mr. Blaine's speech delivered to-day:

MR. PRESIDENT:—For the second time in this generation the great Departments of the United States are assembled in the Hall of Representatives to do honor to the memory of a murdered President. Lincoln fell at the close of a mighty struggle in which the passions of men had been deeply stirred. The tragical termination of his great life added another to the lengthened succession of horrors which had marked too many throats with the blood of the first-born. Garfield was slain in a day of peace, when brother had been reconciled to brother, and when anger and hate had been banished from the land. Who ever shall hereafter draw the portrait of the murder, if he will show how it has been exhibited where such an example was last to have been looked for, let him not give the grim visage of Moloch, the brow knitted by revenge, the face black with settled hate. Let him draw rather a decorous, smooth faced, bloodless demon, not so much an example of human nature in its depravity, and in its peroxides of crime, as an infernal being, a fiend in the ordinary display and development of his character.

GARFIELD'S YOUTH

Was one of privation, but his poverty has been made indelicate and unjustly prominent. Thousands of readers have imagined him as the ragged, starving child whose reality too often greets the eye in the squalid sections of our large cities. General Garfield's infancy and youth had none of their destitution; none of their pitiful appealing to the tender heart—to the open hand of charity. He was in the same sense in which Henry Clay was a poor boy, in which Andrew Jackson was a poor boy, in which Daniel Webster was a poor boy, in the same sense in which a large majority of the eminent men of America in all generations have been poor boys. Before a great multitude Mr. Webster once said: "It did not happen to me to be born in a log cabin, but my elder brothers and sisters were, and were raised amid the snow-drifts of New Hampshire, at a period so early that when the smoke rose first from the crude chimney and curled over the frozen hills, there was no similar evidence of white habitation between it and settlements on the rivers of Canada. Its remains still exist. I make to it an annual visit. I carry my children to it to teach them the hardships endured by generations which have gone before them." I love to dwell on the tender recollections, kindred ties, dignity and earnestness of this speech. In Garfield's mature life he gave evidence of this training. At 18 years of age he was able to teach school, and thenceforth his ambition was to obtain a college education. To this end he bent all his efforts, working in the harvest field, at the carpenter's bench, and in the winter season teaching. While thus laboriously occupied he found time to prosecute his studies, and was so successful that at 23 he was able to enter the junior class at Williams, then under the Presidency of the venerable and all honored Mark Hopkins, who, in the fullest of his powers, survived the eminent pupil, to whom he was of inestimable service. The history of Garfield's life to this period presents no new feature. He had undoubtedly shown perseverance, self-reliance, self-sacrifice and ambition, qualities which, be it said to the honor of our country, are everywhere to be found among the young men of America. But from his graduation at Williams onward to the hour of his tragical death, Garfield's career was eminent and exceptional. Slowly working through his educational period, receiving his diploma when 24 years old, he seemed at one bound to spring into

A CONSPICUOUS AND BRILLIANT SUCCESS.

Within six years he was successively President of a College, State Senator of Ohio, Major-General of the U. S. Army, and Representative to the National Congress. A combination of honors so varied, so elevated, within a period so brief, and to a man so young as to be unprecedented.

The Lower House of Congress is a field in which the survival of the strongest is the recognized rule, and where no pretense can be derived and no glamour can mislead. The real man is discovered. His worth is impartially weighed. His rank is irrevocably decided. With possibly a single exception, Garfield was the youngest member in the House when he entered it, and was but seven years from college graduation; but he had not been in his seat 60 days before his ability was recognized and his place conceded. He stepped to the front with the confidence of a man who belonged there. The House was crowded with strong men of both parties. Many of them have since been transferred to the Senate and many served with distinction in the gubernatorial chair of their respective States and on foreign missions of great consequence, but among all none grew so rapidly, none so firmly as Garfield. As Fenelon said of his parliamentary hero, Garfield succeeded because all the world in concert could not have kept him in the background, and because when once in the front he played his part with a prompt intrepidity and a commanding ease that were but the natural symptoms of immense reserves of energy, on which it was in his power to draw. Indeed, the apparently reserved force which Garfield possessed was one of his great characteristics. He never did so well but that it seemed he could easily have done better. He never expended so much strength but he seemed to be holding additional power at call. This is one of the happiest and rarest distinctions of an effective leader, and often counts for as much in persuading an Assembly as the eloquent and elaborate argument which distinguished his service in the house of representatives.

HIS MILITARY LIFE.

illustrated by honorable performance, and rich in promise, was as he himself felt, prematurely terminated, and necessarily incomplete. Speculation as to what he might have done in a field where the great prizes are so few, cannot be profitable. It is sufficient to say that as a soldier he did his duty bravely; he did it intelligently; he won an enviable fame, and he retired from service without a blot or breath against him. As a lawyer, though admirably equipped for the profession, he can scarcely be said to have entered on its practice. The few efforts made at the bar were distinguished by the same high order of talent which he exhibited on every field on which he was put to the test, and if a man may be accepted as a competent judge of his own capacities and adaptations, the law was the profession to which Garfield should have devoted himself. But fate ordained otherwise and his Republican history will rest largely upon his service in the House of Representatives. That service was exceptionally long. He was nine times, consecutively a Congressman, an honor enjoyed by not more than six other representatives of the more than a thousand who have been elected from the organization of the Government to this House. As a parliamentary orator

AS A DEBATER

On an issue squarely joined, where the position had been chosen and the ground laid out, Garfield must be assigned a very high rank, more so, perhaps, than any man with whom he was associated in public life. He gave careful and systematic study to public questions, and he came to every discussion in which he took part with complete preparations. He was a steady and indefatigable worker. Those who imagine that genius or talent can supply the place or achieve the results of labor will find no encouragement in Garfield's life. In preliminary he was apt, rapid and skillful. He possessed in a high degree the power of absorbing ideas and facts, and, like Dr. Johnson, had the art of getting from a book all that was of value in it by a reading apparently so quick and cursory that it seemed like a mere glance at the table of contents. He was preeminently a fair and candid man in debate, took no petty advantages, stooped to no unworthy methods, avoided personal altercation, rarely appealed to prejudice, did not seek to inflame passion. He had a quicker eye for the strong points of his adversary than for his weak points, and on his own side he so marshaled his weighty arguments as to make his hearers forget any lack in the complete strength of his position. He had a habit of stating his opponent's side with such aptitude of fairness and such significance. Those unfamiliar with Garfield's industry, and ignorant of the details of his work, may in some degree measure them by the annals of Congress. No one of the generation of public men to which he belonged has contributed much that will be valuable for future reference.

HIS SPEECHES

Are numerous, many of them brilliant, all of them well studied, carefully phrased, and exhaustive of the subject it had under consideration. Collected from the pages of ninety royal octavo volumes of Congressional records, they would present an invaluable compendium of the political history of the most important era through which the National Government has ever passed. When war legislation, measures of reconstruction, protection of human rights, amendments to the Constitution, maintaining public credit, steps toward resumption, true theories of revenue may be reviewed, unassuraged by prejudice and disassociated from partisanship, the speeches of Garfield will be esteemed at their true value, and will be found to contain a vast magazine of fact and argument of clear analysis and sound conclusion. Indeed, if no other authority were accessible, his speeches in the House of Representatives from December, 1893, to June, 1899, would give a well connected history and a complete defense of the important legislation of seventeen eventful years that constitute his Parliamentary life. Far beyond that his speeches would be found to forecast many great measures which he knew were beyond the public opinion of the hour, but which he confidently believed would secure popular approval within the period of his own life-time and by the aid of his own efforts. Differing as Garfield does from Parliamentary leaders, it is not easy to find his counterpart anywhere in the record of American public life. He, perhaps, more nearly resembled Mr. Seward in his supreme faith in the all conquering power of a principle. He had the love of learning and the patient industry of investigation to which John Quincy Adams owes his prominence and his Presidency. He had some of those ponderous elements of mind which distinguished Mr. Webster, and which, indeed, in all our public life, have left the great Massachusetts Senator without an intellectual peer in English Parliamentary history as in our own. The leaders in the House of Commons present points of essential difference from Garfield, but some of his methods recall those best features in the strong, independent course of Sir Robert Peel, and the resemblance is discoverable in that most promising of modern conservatism, who died too early for his country and his fame, Lord George Bentinck. He had all of Burke's love for the sublime and beautiful, with possibly something of his superabundance, and in his faith, and in his magnanimity, in his power of statement, in his subtle analysis, in his faultless logic, in his love of literature, in his wealth of world of illustration, resembled that great English statesman of to-day who confronted obstacles that would daunt any but the dauntless, who reviled by those whose supposed rights he is forced to invade, still labored with serene courage for the amelioration of Ireland. Garfield's

NOMINATION TO THE PRESIDENCY. While not predicted or anticipated, was not a surprise to the country. His prominence in Congress, his solid qualities, his wide reputation, strengthened by his then recent election as Senator from Ohio, kept him in the public eye as a man occupying the very highest range among those entitled to be called statesmen. It was not mere chance that brought him this high honor. "We must," says Mr. Emerson, "reckon success a constitutional trait. If Eric is in robust health and has slept well, and is at the top of his condition and he will steer west, and his ships will reach Newfoundland. But take Eric and put in a stronger and bolder man, and the ships will sail one thousand or fifteen hundred miles further, and reach Labrador and New England." There is no chance in the result. As a candidate Garfield steadily grew in popular favor. He was met with a storm of derision at the very hour of his nomination, and it continued with increasing volume and momentum till the close of his victorious campaign. No might nor greatness in morality can secure escape from a back wound in calumny. The whitest virtue cannot tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue. Under it all he was calm, and strong and confident. He never lost self-possession, did no unwise act, spoke no hasty or illconsidered word, indeed nothing in his whole life is more remarkable or creditable than his bearing through those five full months of vituperation. A prolonged agony of trial to a sensitive man. The great mass of these unjust imputations passed unnoticed, and with the general debris of the campaign, fell into oblivion. But in a few instances

THE IRON ENTERED HIS SOUL, and he died with the injury unforgetten, if not unforgotten. One aspect of Garfield's candidacy was unprecedented. Never before in the history of partisan contests had a successful Presidential candidate spoke freely on passing events and current issues. To attempt anything of the kind seemed novel, rash, and even desperate. The older classes of voters recalled the unfortunate Alabama letter, in which Mr. Clay was supposed to have signed his political death-warrant. They remembered also the hot-tempered effusion by which General Scott lost a large share of his popularity before his nomination, and the unfortunate speeches which rapidly consumed the remainder. The young voters had seen Mr. Greeley in a series of vigorous and original addresses preparing the path-way for his defeat. Unmindful of these warnings, unheeding the advice of friends, he spoke to large crowds as he journeyed to and from New York in August, to a great multitude in that city, to delegations and deputations of every kind that called at Mentor during the Summer and Autumn with watchfulness and eager to catch a phrase that might be turned to odium or ridicule or a sentence that might be distorted to his own or his party's injury. Garfield did not trip or halt in any one of his 70 speeches. This seems all the more remarkable when it is remembered that he did not write what he said, and yet spoke with such logical consecutiveness of thought and such precision of phrase as to disarm accident or misreport and the malignity of misrepresentation. In the beginning of

HIS PRESIDENTIAL LIFE. Garfield's experience did not yield him pleasure or satisfaction. The duties that engrossed so large a portion of the President's time were distasteful to him, and were unfavorably contrasted with his legislative work. "I have been dallying all these years with ideas," he impatiently exclaimed one day, "and here I'm dealing only with persons. I have been heretofore treating of the fundamental principles of government, and here I am considering all day whether A or B shall be appointed to this or that office."

He was earnestly seeking some practical way of correcting the evils arising from the distribution from overgrown and unyielding patronage. It was always appreciated and often discussed by him, but its magnitude had been more deeply impressed upon his mind since his accession to the Presidency. Had he lived, a comprehensive improvement in the mode of appointment and in the tenure of office would have been proposed by him, and with the aid of Congress would, no doubt, have been perfected. From the very outset he exhibited

ADMINISTRATIVE TALENT. Of a high order. He grasped the helm of office with the hand of a master. In this respect, indeed he constantly surprised many—especially those who feared he might be lacking in the executive faculty. His dispatch of business was orderly and rapid; his power of analyzing and his skill in classification enabled him to dispatch a vast mass of detail with singular promptness and ease. His Cabinet meetings were admirably conducted. His clear presentation of official subjects, his well considered suggestions of topics on which discussion was invited, his quick decision when all had been heard, combined to show a thoroughness of mental training as rare as his natural ability and his facile adaptation of a new and enlarged field of labor. Garfield conceived that much might be done by his administration towards restoring harmony between different sections of the Union. He was anxious to see the South and speak to the people. As early as April he had ineffectually endeavored to arrange for a trip to Nashville. He was disappointed, a few weeks after, to find he could not go to South Carolina to attend the centennial commemoration of the victory of Cowpens. But, for the Autumn, he definitely counted on being present at three memorable assemblies in the South—the celebration at Yorktown, the opening of the Cotton Exposition at Atlanta, and the meeting of the Army of the Cumberland at Chattanooga. He was turning over in his mind his address for each occasion, and the three taken together gave him the exact scope needed.

AT YORK TOWN

He would have before him associations of a hundred years, that bound the South and North in the sacred memory of a common danger and a common victory. At Atlanta he would present material interests which appealed to thrift and independence and which should unite two sections by the instinct of self-interest and self-defense. At Chattanooga he would revive the memories of war only to show that, after all its disaster and its suffering, the country was stronger and greater. Garfield's ambition for the success of his administration was high. He loved his country with a passion of patriotic adoration, and every waking thought was given to her advancement. He was an American in all his aspirations. The events which disturbed his serenity for weeks before that fateful day involved matters which he considered vital to the Constitution. The motives of those opposing him are not to be here adversely interpreted, nor their course harshly characterized; but of the dead President this is to be said, and said because his own speech is forever silenced and he can be no more heard except through the fidelity and love of surviving friends: From the beginning to the end of the controversy, the President was never for one moment actuated by motives of gain for himself or loss to others. Least of all did he harbor revenge, rarely did he show resentment and MALICE WAS NOT IN HIS NATURE. He was congenially employed only in the exchange of good offices. There was not an hour from the beginning of the trouble until the fatal shot entered his body, when he would not gladly have retraced any step he had taken if it had been honorable. The wife whom he loved was now recovering from an illness which at times had almost unnerved him. He was going to his alma mater to renew the most cheerful associations of his young manhood. Surely if happiness can ever come from the honors or triumphs of this world, on that quiet July morning James A. Garfield may well have been a happy man. No forboding of evil ever haunted him. Not the slightest premonition of danger clouded his star, his terrible fate was upon him in an instant. One moment he stood erect, strong, confident on the years stretching peacefully out before him, the next he lay wounded, bleeding, helpless, doomed to many weary weeks of torture, to silence and the grave. Great in life, he was surpassingly great in death. For no cause, in the very frenzy of wantonness and wickedness, by the red hand of a murderer, he was thrust from the full life of this world's interest, from his hopes, his aspirations, his victories, into the visible presence of death, and he did not wait.

NEW JERSEY CRIMINALS.

The Prison Life of Cashier Baldwin and Several Other Financiers.

Keeper Lavery, of the New Jersey State Prison, at Trenton, has made Oscar L. Baldwin, the former Cashier of the Mechanics' National Bank of Newark, keeper of the gate at the west end of the prison. The Philadelphia Bulletin says that visitors enter by another gate, and only the men who take in provisions and other supplies can see Baldwin. His head has been closely shorn, and he wears the customary prison suit of red and blue cloth. James A. Hedden, who was formerly Cashier of the First National Bank of Newark, was for a long time keeper of the same gate. Keeper Lavery says Hedden appears to be weak in both body and mind. At times he shows considerable flightiness. His cell and Baldwin's are at different ends of the south corridor, and at least 175 feet apart. Hedden has Controller Leggett, of Elizabeth, for a cell mate, while Baldwin's companion is Lead, the former clerk of Leggett. The four men have common prison fare. Baldwin said, on entering the prison, that he was ready to undergo all the indignities that could justly be put upon him, and had only one request to make—he desired that only his relatives be allowed to see him. The keeper says the prison should be full of men, and, as Baldwin would not make a good mechanic, he will not be put at work there.

YOUNG MEN

WHO MAY BE SUFFERING FROM the effects of youthful follies or indiscretion, will do well to avail themselves of this, the greatest boon ever sold at the price of suffering humanity. DR. SPINNEY will guarantee to forfeit $200 for every case of Seminal Weakness or private disease of any kind or character which he undertakes and fails to cure, and a healthy restoration of the genital-urinary organs.
MIDDLE-AGED MEN.
There are many at the age of thirty and sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits aropy sediment will often be found, and some small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin milky hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause, which is the second stage of seminal weakness. Dr. S. will guarantee a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genital-urinary organs.
Office Hours—10 to 4 and 6 to 8. Sunday from 10 to 11 A. M. Consultation Free. Thorough examination and advice $5.
P. S. For private diseases of short standing a full course of medicines sufficient for a cure, with necessary instructions, will be sent to any address on receipt of $4. Dollars. Call or address DR. SPINNEY & CO. No. 11 Kearney Street, San Francisco, Jan-daw
